SATURDAY EVENING, MAY 17.

REINDER.—In many bleak Northern regions these animals are the sole support of the people. When liberated from harness they go directly in pursuit of food—a peculiar species of voraciousness, which their instinct enables them to find, deeply covered with snow. Some times as many as one hundred start off foraging, there being nothing provided for them by their exacting master. Like camels under similar circumstances, when unladen, they stroll of miles in different directions. When they find a small circle, the men drawing nearer, until it strikes against their break, they huddle under the line and select the animals they want, seizing them by their horns, bringing them outside and tying them to something strong enough to hold them till harnessed to the sleds. The remainder again scatter in pursuit of moss. Strong, tall, and fleet though the reindeer are, able, with a sweep of their antlers, to mow down a score of sturdy Northerners, they cover at the voice of man. Their manners are rude, harsh, and unkind toward them. Under no circumstances of oppression or hardship do they evince the slightest resentment. They are so timid that the sound of their driver's voice sets them running at such speed that they will die before halting if the drivers continue to urge them.

Our old friend, who has taken us under her charge, was an important personage in the milk line, her duty consisting in leading the deer and tying them up ready for milking. The way old woman prepares the milk is very pretty. She takes a dexterous throw, which seldom misses its aim, she flings the milk round the selected animal's horns, and "hauling in the slack" has the reindeer a most secure prisoner. She then knots the rope about the animal's nose, and ties it firmly to a tree; after which she directs her attention to another member of the herd.

When the animal is secured one of the other Lapps, either man or woman, carrying a dirty wooden bowl having a long handle, approaches the captive, and commences the operation of milking, which, accompanied by many resounding slaps on the deer's udder, is a process of sufficient nastiness to provoke a sentiment much resembling disgust.

Each animal yields up half a pint of milk—a rich, unctuous liquid, thick and creamy. We tasted the produce of this herd—with what amount of relish I will not say, since we had the warm fluid trickling over the grimy hands of the Lapps, from which it certainly received a modicum of dirt. I sipped for the sake of being able to say that I knew the flavor of reindeer milk; but I was sincerely glad to forget the taste by cramming my mouth full of berries of a less nauseous character than the lacted compound.—London Society.
